Market performance[1] has been mixed. The US and Europe traded sideways, while Japan rallied strongly on hopes of greater fiscal expansion. Tensions over US president Trump's actions hampered US assets' performance. The gold price rose to over $4,600/oz. US equities exposures recorded strong flows, followed by World and EM equities exposures[2]. In Fixed Income, USD aggregate, short duration US treasuries and EM debt were ahead.

INCOME AND GROWTH IN EUROPEAN SECTORS

- EMU banks for a high income exposure: EU banks remain reasonably valued in comparison to historic levels and other industries. Shareholder returns via income distribution and share buyback could be a key driver for the sector's performance[1].
- European Defence - strong growth ahead? The EU embraced a more coherent security policy last year, with broad support for vast defence spending and fiscal stimulus. EU defence budgets are on a long-term upward trajectory to 2035.

Income and growth in European sectors

European equities have been under the spotlight last year, delivering strong outperformance[1] against US equities with inflows well ahead compared to previous years. Buttressed by a further normalisation in policy rates, a gradual shift towards greater EU independence, and heavily discounted valuations against US equities, investor interest in European equities continue to surge.

Lower policy rates and easing inflation remain supportive factors for domestic demand and a recovery in activity. In our view, European equities look well-positioned to mitigate tariff-related impact through fiscal and monetary policy reforms that aim to enhance EU competitiveness and respond directly to declining energy costs

EMU banks for a high income exposure

European equities started the year on a positive footing[1], ahead of US equities (3.8% vs 1.45% total return in local currency as at 15/01/2026). In the past year, local performance has been supported by factors ranging from accommodative monetary policy, a recovery in economic activity and a range of reforms aiming at improving the region's competitiveness.

Consensus estimates for European equities are now anticipating double digit EPS growth for this year and next (10.5% YoY and 11.8% YoY – data based on Bloomberg estimates as at 15/01/2026 for the Stoxx Europe 600). These projections remain sensibly below those of US equities (+13.9% and 14.5% YoY for FY26 and FY27) and leave room for further rerating potential. European equity strategies have been the most popular category in the UCITS ETF market in 2025, attracting over €65bn in net new assets (as at 31/12/2025 – see our Money Monitor for a full review of flows into the UCITS ETF market). There was also accrued appetite for European sector exposures, which have gathered close to €12.5bn in 2025. Investors mainly allocated into financials (incl. banks), defence, industrials and healthcare exposures.

Looking ahead, the focus will be on Germany's ability to spend and the wider impact on the European economy. A potential ceasefire could allow Europe to capitalise on Ukraine's reconstruction. Overall, fiscal spending in Europe, if efficiently deployed, could provide a significant boost to overall EU GDP growth from 2026, which could translate into greater EPS expansion. The chart below highlights the positive relationship between the Stoxx Europe 600 index's annual EPS growth and GDP growth in the euro area in the past 15 years. Meanwhile, moderate growth and improved credit conditions have also supported the recovery in the banking sector in the last couple of years. The sector remains reasonably valued, with price-to-book ratios only marginally above historical levels. More specifically, EMU banks hold the highest payout level to shareholders in Europe, with insurance. Additionally, effective allocation through share buybacks in the sector has further enhanced shareholder value in recent months. In 2024, the sector accounted for almost 20% of total share buybacks in the STOXX Europe 600 according to Bloomberg data. A high level of share buybacks enhances shareholder value, by increasing earnings per share (EPS).

European Defence: strong growth ahead?

Hopes of a potential truce in Ukraine have supported the performance[1] of traditional cyclical sectors such as Industrials in recent months. The sector comes up as the second largest contributor to overall index performance[1] last year (c. 23% of total index performance - net total return in euro as at 31/12/2025). While uncertainty remains, an end to fighting in Ukraine would allow for lower energy prices, greater spending levels for the country's reconstruction (the World Bank estimates $524bn) alongside ongoing coordinated actions from Europe for defence independence. The STOXX Europe Industrials 30-15 index stands out due to its exposure to aerospace & defence, machinery engineering and construction, representing just over half of total index weight (as at end of December 2025).

Narrowing it down to companies with a direct revenue exposure to the defence sector, previously under-the-radar national champions like France's Thales, Germany's Rheinmetall and Italy's Leonardo have risen to prominence. Meanwhile, companies like Rolls-Royce, Airbus and BAE Systems[3] are longstanding players in the global defence sector, demonstrating the breadth and quality of options in Europe. Increased defence budgets amongst EU members and greater order levels are likely to strengthen the balance sheets of companies with proven revenue exposure to defence activities. In this context, the STOXX Europe Total Market Defense Capped Index could be worthy of further consideration. While the sector has recorded strong performance[1] so far this year (15.3% as at 15/01/2026) and last year (72.3% as at 31/12/2025), consensus expectations of close to 30%+ EPS growth in the next couple of years may justify current elevated valuations.

Europe has embraced a more coherent security policy, with broad support for vast additional defence spending and fiscal stimulus. European defence budgets are on a long-term upward trajectory to 2035. German fiscal stimulus has the potential for great spending levels that are expected to extend at-least through 2029. As firms scale and capacity increases, export markets provide a further potential boost to what has historically been a largely domestic sector. European defence stocks offer investors a generational opportunity to gain exposure to a segment of the market with long-term growth potential.

Knowing your risk

It is important for potential investors to evaluate the risks described below and in the fund's Key Investor Document ("KID") and prospectus available on our website www.amundietf.com.

CAPITAL AT RISK

ETFs are tracking instruments. Their risk profile is similar to a direct investment in the underlying index. Investors' capital is fully at risk and investors may not get back the amount originally invested.

UNDERLYING RISK

The underlying index of an ETF may be complex and volatile. For example, ETFs exposed to Emerging Markets carry a greater risk of potential loss than investment in Developed Markets as they are exposed to a wide range of unpredictable Emerging Market risks.

REPLICATION RISK

The fund's objectives might not be reached due to unexpected events on the underlying markets which will impact the index calculation and the efficient fund replication.

COUNTERPARTY RISK

Investors are exposed to risks resulting from the use of an OTC swap (over-the-counter) or securities lending with the respective counterparty(-ies). Counterparty(-ies) are credit institution(s) whose name(s) can be found on the fund's website amundietf.com. In line with the UCITS guidelines, the exposure to the counterparty cannot exceed 10% of the total assets of the fund.

CURRENCY RISK

An ETF may be exposed to currency risk if the ETF is denominated in a currency different to that of the underlying index securities it is tracking. This means that exchange rate fluctuations could have a negative or positive effect on returns.

LIQUIDITY RISK

There is a risk associated with the markets to which the ETF is exposed. The price and the value of investments are linked to the liquidity risk of the underlying index securities. Investments can go up or down. In addition, on the secondary market liquidity is provided by registered market makers on the respective stock exchange where the ETF is listed. On exchange, liquidity may be limited as a result of a suspension in the underlying market represented by the underlying index tracked by the ETF; a failure in the systems of one of the relevant stock exchanges, or other market-maker systems; or an abnormal trading situation or event.

VOLATILITY RISK

The ETF is exposed to changes in the volatility patterns of the underlying index relevant markets. The ETF value can change rapidly and unpredictably, and potentially move in a large magnitude, up or down.

CONCENTRATION RISK

ETFs can select a large portion of their assets in a particular issuer, industry, stocks or type of bonds, country or region for their portfolio. Where selection rules are extensive, it can lead to a more concentrated portfolio where risk is spread over fewer stocks. Where selection rules are extensive, it can lead to a more concentrated portfolio where risk is spread over fewer stocks. This can mean both higher volatility and a greater risk of loss.
